HOMESTEAD, Pa., July 29. It is probable that as a result of the agreets yesterday, a counter charge will be made by one of the locked out men for conspiracy against general superintendent Potter, of the steel works here. Hearing that informations were out for an aggravated riot, bargess—John McLuckle, Hugh Ross and Riner Baille went to Pittsburg yesterday and surrendered themselves and were bailed in 49,000. On their return to Homestead, Baille stated that the suid against him was purely spite work, and that he would sue Potter.

Horefread Pa., July 29. The effects of the lockout are being left in town. To-day a constable closed a grocery store, the owner concludings to go out of the business, owing to his inability to carry on an extensive credit business. A number of merchants while in sympathy with the locked out men, are deolding upon a plan whereby they will not give credit, but will self at absolute cost to all locked out men. The relief committee which has charge of all poorer paid labor meets all demands upon it, though daily the long line of persons asking assistance grows larger. Brotection Promised.

HONESTEAD, Pa. July 29 Altogether about 420 strikers have returned to work in the mills. It is said each of them received warnings of dire punishment to be inflicted unless they quit work at once. The Carnegie officials have promised them protection.

When the strike was maugurated in Hon estead a resolution was passed by the advisory committee that any men who left the town without their permison would not be allowed to work in the mults wheth the strike ended. This arble weeks but now every day a lot of strikers are basing the place to seek employment elsewhere. This illustrates the despote rule of the so-called leaders. They have not ally forced the men to lose their places in the Homestead mills, but have demanded that they should remain in idleпения ч long as it pleased them to соо timue the strike. According to the report n a Demperatic paper the talk about a fund with which to support the men a vent if necessary is a myth, and what mones they have has been divided among a few hupdred men, the 3,000 mechanics and laborers who gave up their positions/to help them not receiving a cent. This only tends to strengthen what we said a few days ago, namely. that the workingmen should rid them selves of the leaders who are responsible for creating a strike with which the great body of the men are not in sympathy at door and saying: "Mr. Denning, I never, never can thank you enough if you will do this! Mamma is a little better, and if she can see John for one hour it would do her more good than medicine. I will wait at the side gate for him, and he shall leave before daylight."

There were a few more hurried ques-tions and replies, and then Will was climbing the hill to a still more difficult interview. A night pass was not an easy thing for which to ask his father, but he could not leave the fort without it. The colonel was a very quiet and somewhat stern man, and Will knew that the best way was the straightforward one. He made his request in the fewest words.

"I am almost a man, father," he said, after he had made his request, "and I want you to trust me now, as you have always done in small matters. I can't tell you about it now, but I am doing nothing wrong. I am only helping a poor fellow in great trouble. I know your heart has not the better of your head in this matter, and will get you

"I give you my word of honor, sir, that in my circumstances I believe you would do just what I wish to do."

"Then here are your papers, and re-member it is the commander of the fort as well as your father who trusts you.

Every leaf in the old cottonwood on the bank seemed to quiver as Will started on his lonely trip. The green band of light above the horizon had quite died away, and the river seemed blacker than the night. Things which mysterious and fearful now, and every huge black shadow around the hoat semed to contain an enemy.

It was not pleasant to think of the

As they were swinging inshore by a raft of decaying logs a suppressed voice called to them:

"John! It's Fred, and it's all right."
